LITTLE NAVY' Loses fight to

Life-Saving Section Eventually to Become Part of Commerce Dept, Lighthouse Service.

Our original navy, the United States coast guard, after 131 years of existence, is about to give up the fight to prevent digestion by our big navy. The table is all set for the absorption of the little morsel, needing only the signal from the President. This consolidation of a small branch with a larger similar department is to be the prologue to the administrative drama of mergers and transfers in the executive activities.

The coast guard has the center of tivities.

The coast guard has the center of the stage in the prologue because Secretary Mellon has cast it adrift as "no child of the Treasury Department." Then the forceful C. G. Dawes, director of the budget, simply couldn't figure a budget to cover a branch cut from its old moorings, and he asked the President for the answer. Chairman Brown, of the legislative reorganization committee. legislative reorganization committee, fixed his binoculars on it and told his conferees here was a good start, as he figured it would be easy to float the "derelict" down and tie it up securely at Secretary Denby's permanent station.

Blocked Ten Days Ago. Everything was set to shove off to the rescue ten days ago under executive order, when the news leaked and a halt was called on the expedition. The Life-Saving Service, with its 273 stations dotting the coasts and the Great Lakes, having representation in nearly as many Congressional districts, started the opposition machin-ery, and the President has been hear-ing from the home folks to the effect "this great service must not "the Coast Guard with its Life-Saving Service must not suffer di-gestion by the navy," and things like

The President is patient and court cous and he is halting to listen in a respectful attitude; but that is all, for when he has bowed out the last of the opposition, the date will be inserted and he will sign the executive order, declaring that in the interests of economy and efficiency the United States Coast Guard will hereafter be operated under the Navy Department. He has that authority in law and he does not intend to delegate it, or wait the hazard of delay while the reorganization committee gets into posiganization committee gets into posi-tion to act. Eventually the Life-Sav-ing Service will be transferred from the Navy to the Department of Com-merce and form a part of the Light-house Service, both being on a civilian

They said that a good portion of the new merchant fleet, built hastily during the emergency under Government expense was not up to the tra-ditional efficiency of American-built shipping. An unusually large proportion of tonnage under the An flag, they declared, is deficient either in construction of hull or of machinery. Such being fact, the ship owners merely asked if the Government was willing to take the responsi-bility with the meager life-saving resources of the coast guard. Congress Indifferent.

Congress didn't act, but it became indifferent to maintenance of coast guard independence, and the reorganigation committee months ago allowed it to become known that one of its convictions was that the 'little navy" place was under the wing o the big navy. There it will be wel-comed for officers and men of its old war, as in all wars, showed they were of the navy and followed navy tradition. And under the navy it will have wider scope and greater equipment for carrying out regular and system-atic assistance to the mercantile mar-ine on all coasts and the insular pos-sessions, for the Arctic patrols, and Alaska in fighting the ravages of influenza which practically wiped out the population of the northern region. In the warld war the coast was really at the jump-off, and on April 6, 1917, the day war on Germany was declared, its ships seized five enemy vessels at New Orleans, one at Yew London, Conn., and another at San Juan, Porto Rico. Six cruising cutters were dispatched to overseas duty with the navy, the Algonquin. Manning, Ossipee, Seneca, Tampa, and Yanucraw. Based on Gibraltar these were engaged in escort of con voys through submarine, infested waters and made remarkable records. On the night of September 26, 1918, the Tampa was destroyed by an enemy

Edith's Marriage to a Chicago Groom Is Her Affair, Says Papa Webb, Friend of J. P. Morgan—Bride Sings Washing Dishes, While Husband Shoots Rats in Employer's Barn.

NEW YORK, Sept. 3.—The eyes of society are centered just now on the piquant figure of Miss Alice Beaver Webb, last of the three beautiful daughters of J. Pierpont Morgan's intimate friend. With Louise wedded to Mounted Policeman Thomas J. Leonard, in New York, and Edith Beaver Webb now the bride of George Miles worked for him on that account more than any other.
